Executive Workshops / Business projects

Conduct marketing research and training for business-to-business and business-to-consumer firms focused primarily on branding strategies, shopper marketing, and proactive customer orientation processes (market sensing). Proactive customer orientation work involves examining and refining customer value understanding processes aimed at anticipating future customer desires, linking those insights to innovation and marketing strategy. Branding work involves corporate and product identity and positioning.

Projects and significant interaction with:

Alcoa, Boeing, Bush Bros., Danzas, Eastman Chemical Company, FedEx, Fokker Services, Follet Educational Services, Frito-Lay, Grundfos Pumps, Hoyt & Co., IdleAire (motor carrier service), Inmar/Carolina Logistics Services, Mars Advertising, Nordic Transport Rail, Norfolk Southern Railroad, Pepsico, Pilot Flying J, Rolls Royce (jet engines), Schenker, Standard Logistics, TracyLocke Advertising, Timminco, U.S. Air Force, USCO Logistics

Industries explored:

Consumer packaged goods, global wine, retailing, consumer electronics, aircraft maintenance services, Internet returns management, water pumps, military radar system test equipment, transportation services, helicopter and aircraft manufacturing, aerospace/satellite industry, railroad, automotive, logistics services, medical devices, computers, chemicals, magnesium, aluminum, education, textbooks

Research Focus

My research currently broadly focuses on the consumer goods/retailing context. Historically, my focus has been predominantly on business-to-business marketing issues related to market sensing and strategy development. Specifically, much of my work revolves around customer value understanding and management at any stage within a supply chain, e.g., consumer, retailer, distributor, manufacturer, supplier. I am currently most interested in shopper marketing phenomena that relate to business-to-business relationships, manufacturer and retailer-to-consumer marketing, and shopper insights for consumer packaged goods firms and retailers. My global wine marketing and supply chain management research draws in all aspects of my marketing and SCM interests, for example, brand management, co-creation, social media, innovation, sustainability, and resilience. My proactive customer orientation program of research is on understanding how changes in customer value perceptions are manifested within buyer/consumer perceptions and behavior as well as buyer-seller relationships (B2B and B2C) and the implications for forward-looking market sensing, marketing strategy, brand management, product development and innovation throughout the supply chain. A related research area involves customer-driven supply chain innovation. In addition to my marketing focus, I have spent a number of years publishing on the customer value and logistics innovation concepts within premier logistics journals as well as working with logistics service providers and industrial firms about these marketing issues in a supply chain context.

When studying buyer or seller behavior, I typically focus on individuals and small groups as the unit of analysis, primarily drawing on psychological and social psychological theory to understand value change, meaning, attitudes and behavior, often relying on, but not limited to, qualitative interpretive methods. I link my social psychological insights to marketing strategy and innovation in retail, broker and industrial firms. Methodologically, my work has relied on interpretive, structural equation modeling and experimental approaches. I focus significantly on guiding, mentoring, and publishing with current and former doctoral students of mine as well as a select few scholars.

Service Activities

Administrative

Director/Founder, UT Shopper Marketing Forum (launched Nov. 2009)

This is a major initiative that has required significant executive interaction at the President and CEO level of numerous Fortune 100 firms as well as significant on-campus faculty interaction to build an organization that not only provides financial support for the department but also provides faculty, PhD students, and MBA students access to leadership thinking, research opportunities and an enhanced/refined curriculum.

The vision of the Shopper Marketing Forum is to make UTK the birth place for shopper marketing leaders of the future.
